Legal Options:

Depending on the relationship you have to the alleged abuser, there are two types of civil relief: a protective order and a peace order

Protective Orders: civil orders issued by a judge for victims of domestic violence that orders one person to refrain from committing certain acts against others. The judge can order the abuser to stay away from the victim, order the abused to be removed from the home and give you temporary custody of children that you have with the abuser: Filing protective orders

Peace Order: a form of legal protection for anyone who is experiencing problems with an individual, including someone in a dating relationship, a neighbor, a stranger, or anyone else. This order enables an individual to have an order for the other person to stay away and refrain from any contact. Allows any person who has been subjected to abuse, harassment, stalking, trespassing, or malicious destruction of property to seek relief from the court. Unlike protective orders, the nature of the relationship between the parties is not a factor when petitioning the court for a peace order: Filing a peace order
